Cal EOC Incident – 2014 Drought

- SOC / Inland REOC remains activated in support of 2014 Drought

Weather of Concern

- A storm system will affect Northern California Monday night through early Wednesday, bringing possible travel impacts. Snow levels at the start of the event will be high, but are expected to fall rapidly to as low as 1500 feet Tuesday and Tuesday night. Uncertainty still exists in the exact track of the storm system, and this could have a large impact on precipitation amounts and snow levels across NW California.
- Santa Ana Conditions will strengthen tonight into Saturday, bringing the potential for extreme fire tonight through Sunday afternoon. A Red Flag Warning is in effect for Ventura County and much of Los Angeles County. Northeast winds are expected to gust to around 50 mph across the mountains and to around 40 mph for the coastal and valley areas that are prone to Santa Ana winds. Locally higher gusts will be possible. Relative Humidities during the daytime will fall into the teens by Saturday afternoon and into the lower teens to upper single digits by Sunday afternoon. Poor overnight recoveries are expected Saturday night. These conditions will bring the potential for rapid fire growth and extreme fire behavior if ignition occurs. The gusty northeast winds may also result in downed tree limbs and localized power outages in areas prone to Santa Ana winds, as well as hazardous cross-winds for motorists.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Mild and dry conditions are expected tonight and last through the weekend. Another pacific storm system will bring colder temperatures along with rain and mountain snow Monday night through Wednesday.

Medford Weather:

Today will feature partly to mostly sunny skies with most morning valley fog and clouds clearing by late morning or early afternoon.

Reno Weather:

Dry weather and relatively light winds will continue through the weekend. Next week starting Tuesday, a winter storm will bring much colder temperatures and chances of snow for the Thanksgiving Holiday.

San Francisco Weather:

High pressure aloft and light offshore flow will continue our mild and dry weather conditions through the weekend. A cold weather system is projected to move southward from the Gulf of Alaska and into California by the middle of next week. This system will bring much cooler conditions to our region along with a chance of showers Tuesday and Wednesday. Dry and cold weather is expected on Thanksgiving Day and Friday.

WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY:

Sacramento Weather:

Dry and mild weather will continue through the weekend with above normal temperatures. Colder Pacific storm will bring some precipitation late Monday into Wednesday, mainly over the mountains. Dry weather expected Thanksgiving Day.

Hanford Weather:

Mainly clear skies and a slight warming trend will continue this weekend due to high pressure. In addition patchy dense fog is possible in the San Joaquin Valley mainly during the late night through the morning hours during the weekend and into early next week. A cold storm system may move in next Tuesday and Wednesday.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Surface high pressure building into the great basin will bring Santa Ana conditions through Sunday with above normal temperatures for the coastal and valley areas. A cooling trend will begin on Monday with more significant cooling by mid-week as a weak low pressure system moves through Northern California. A colder system will arrive around mid-week bringing a chance of rain.

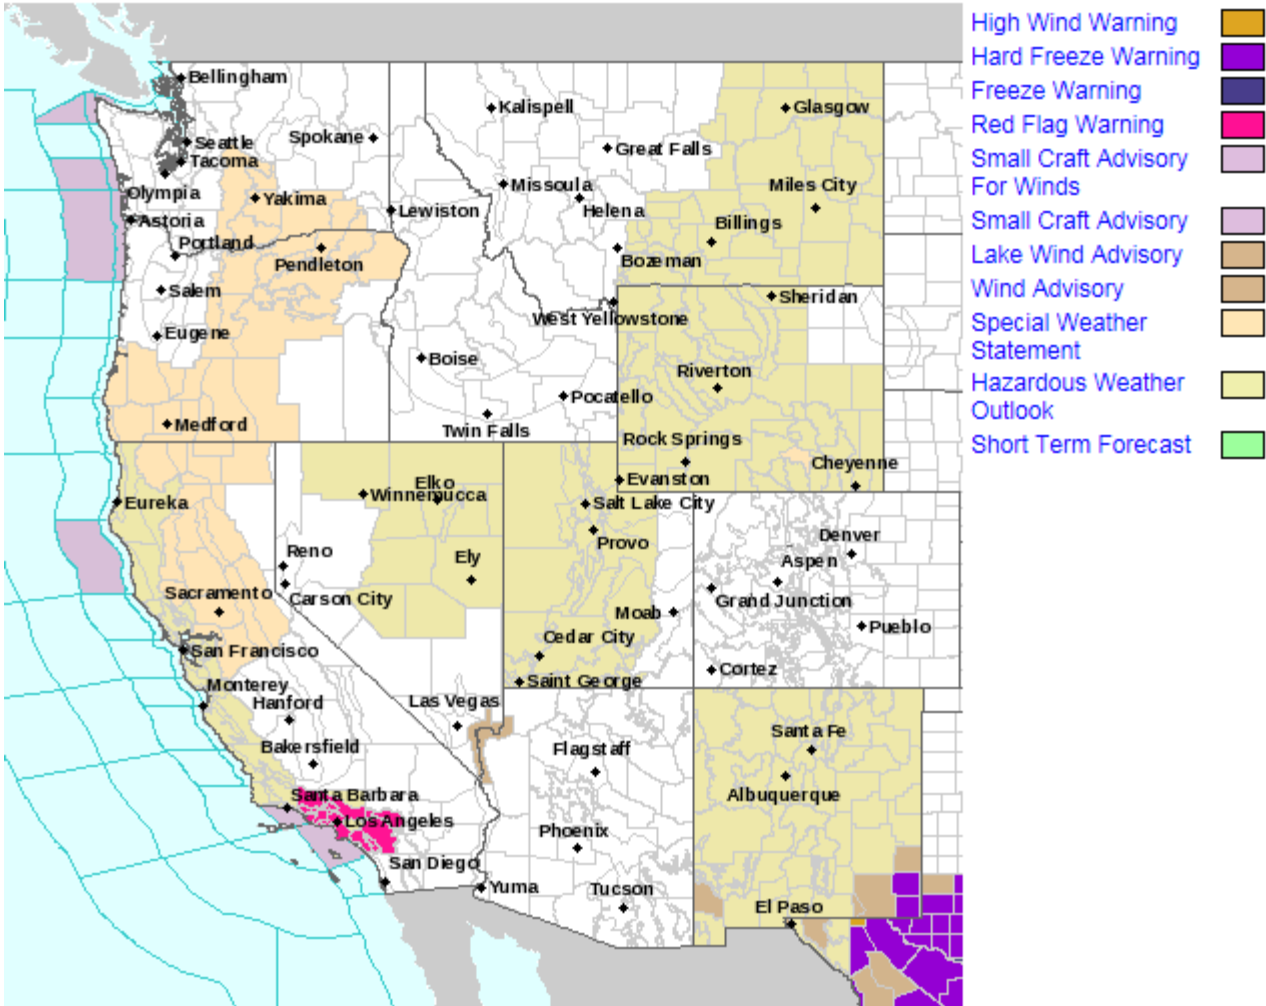

Extreme Southwestern California including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

High pressure aloft off the coast and surface high pressure over the great basin will bring warm and dry conditions this weekend with gusty northeast winds near the coastal foothills. Onshore flow will return on Monday and strengthen on Tuesday and Wednesday as a cold low pressure system moves southward along the west coast. This will bring strong gusty west winds for the mountains and deserts Tuesday and Wednesday a chance of mainly light showers for late Tuesday night through Wednesday evening and much cooler temperatures. With gradually warmer temperatures for Friday and Saturday due to the weak offshore flow.

Southeast California Weather:

A very dry northwest flow aloft will produce mostly clear skies with warm temperatures through Tuesday. Afternoon temperatures each day will warm to near 80 degrees across much of the lower deserts. A strong and unseasonably cold pacific weather system is forecast to deepen into the desert Southwest next Wednesday and Thursday resulting in breezy to windy conditions and much colder temperatures.
